

Dear Hiring Manager,

I am writing to convey my genuine enthusiasm for the Graduate Programme - Technology Data and Innovation (TDI) at Deutsche Bank. Growing up in close association with Deutsche Bank with family members contributing to its legacy has imbued me with a deep respect for its values and vision. This personal connection has amplified my desire to be a part of and contribute to the bank's ongoing trajectory.

Throughout my career I've strategically emphasized value creation resulting in pivotal advancements and transformative impacts for every organization I've served. At Lufthansa Group I developed tools that enhanced both operational efficiency and market competitiveness attracting fresh business avenues. My endeavors at SeeMe and Introhm underscored my commitment to harness cutting-edge technology to craft products that not only meet users' immediate needs but also push industry boundaries of the health and fitness industries. The endorsement from giants like Microsoft securing Series A funding for a start-up and boosting operational efficiencies by considerable margins are testaments to the tangible impacts of my work.

Raised in various countries, my pursuit of the American Dream isn't just about achieving personal success; it's about harnessing the limitless potential of technology to shape a better future. This international journey has fueled my passion for pushing the frontiers of innovation. With a global lens, I approach challenges ensuring that the solutions I craft not only meet technical benchmarks but also resonate with diverse user needs on a worldwide scale.

Joining Deutsche Bank presents an exciting opportunity for me to extend this value-driven approach. Together, I believe we can achieve both innovative and impactful outcomes that bolster Deutsche Banks trajectory. I look forward to the potential of our collaboration.

Thank you for considering my application.

Warm regards,
Jannis Grimm
